

Lorem Ipsum for Old-Style Serif fonts

The introductory text of this document is in Liberation Serif which is not an Old-Style serif font.

The Old-Style serif fonts originally dated from the earliest non-blackletter printing in the Renaissance up to the mid 18th century. Summarising Wikipedia, Old-style serif fonts have remained popular for setting body text because of their organic appearance and excellent readability on rough book paper. They are characterized by a lack of large differences between thick and thin lines and generally by a diagonal stress (thinnest parts of letters at an angle rather than at top and bottom). During this period italic type evolved from a quite separate genre of type intended for informal uses such as poetry, to taking a secondary role for emphasis. Italics moved from being conceived as separate designs and proportions to being able to be fitted into the same line as roman type with a design complementary to it.

As well as a paragraph of dummy text for each font, I attempt to show the normal digits, a few letters which can look similar, and some symbols used in program text or in quoting.

I then attempt to give a guide to which weights of a font are available. In CSS markup the weights are: 100 thin, 200 extralight, 300 light, 400 normal, 500 medium, 600 semibold, 700 bold, 800 extrabold, 900 black. I also show 'V' if a font has a variable weight. Many fonts only have normal (4) or bold (7) weights.

After that, I list the availability of small caps, italics, italic small caps.

Many of these fonts only come in a normal weight because they are intended for body text.

The codes are:

scl latin small caps

scc cyrillic small caps

scg greek (monotonic) monotonic small caps

itl latin italics

itc cyrillic italics

itg greek (monotonic) italics

sil latin small cap italics sic cyrillic small cap italics

sig greek (monotonic) small cap italics

They have the following values:

- N/A

a only a-z, maybe one or two other letters (scl)

Y Present for supported languages

† scl i loses its dot

(Usage in Azeri or Turkish would need added U+0307 combining dot above)

# missing modern glyphs for Abkhazian (itc only, where main font has these)

§ Missing versions of uncommon letters in some latin languages

@ Mismapped and missing italic letters in Ukrainian

I do not mention the italic style where it does not exist, but for the normal faces, and where there is an italic style, I list all the codes (cyrillic, greek) whether or not the main font covers that alphabet.

Unfortunately, there is no consistency about how big the glyphs in an individual font of a 'standard' point size are - bigger glyphs spread text over more lines, nor how long individual lorem ipsum dummy paragraphs are. I have attempted to use smaller dummy paragraphs for large fonts such as DejaVu and Noto.

The font names are in bold italics if the font provides those.
